

AXIS COMMUNICATIONS AB Policy on Responsible Minerals Procurement

Many companies, including the AXIS COMMUNICATIONS AB (collectively referred to as "AXIS"), manufacture and sell products that use materials derived from a variety of minerals, and these materials are procured from origins throughout the world through diverse supply chains. Some of these are pointed out to involve armed forces, serious human rights violations and environmental destruction at processing sites such as mineral mining sites and smelters. In addition, avoiding the use of materials supplied by businesses with high human rights and environmental risks in the region is required as one of the corporate social responsibilities.

Based on the due diligence guidelines established by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), AXIS uses materials derived from tantalum, tin, gold, and tungsten (conflict minerals) as well as other minerals that AXIS determines to be at high risk. Regarding the source material, (1) Confirm that it is not a source of funds for armed groups located in the Democratic Republic of Congo and its neighboring countries in central Africa, and (2) Human rights and environment in conflict areas and high-risk areas around the world. In order to avoid procurement from high-risk processing partners, we will conduct rational origin surveys and due diligence (appropriate surveys). If a significant risk is found in the supply chain, we request our business partners to switch to a supply chain with a lower risk, and we will fulfill our responsible mineral procurement. AXIS will appropriately disclose information regarding these efforts to customers and stakeholders.

For the business partners of AXIS, we ask that they fully understand the international situation regarding responsible mineral procurement and cooperate with the investigations and audits conducted by AXIS and the elimination of discovered risks. As a member of the global supply chain, we ask you to work responsibly to procure minerals in order to supply quality products.
